

Reconnecting City Council with City Communities

The people of Adelaide keep telling me the same thing: City Council has become alienating, inward-looking, and irrelevant.

It's time to restore competence and cooperation to the council.

It's time to restore trust in leadership that works with and for those who matter most: You.

A City Council with a vision

I envisage a City Council that's collaborative and transparent.

A Council that listens to its residents, rate-payers and business owners.

A Council that builds on what's best about Adelaide and preserves the things we love.

A Council that can design and execute effective, evidence-based strategies for managing the challenges and opportunities our city faces.

Here's why I'm the candidate you can count on:

My Experience

I have lived in Adelaide for more than 30 years. I have worked, run a local business, and raised a family here. I have also been a City Councillor, Lord Mayor, a Member of State Parliament, and a Minister, as well as being deeply involved in multiple scientific, educational, cultural, and community organisations, including the South Australian Museum, TechInSA, JamFactory, and the Royal Institution of Australia. I know how the system can and should work for people.

My Record

I previously spent nine years in local government, including three years as Lord Mayor, and have built respectful relationships with people across the political spectrum. I have supported city-wide development and revitalisation programs, while fighting to protect our Park Lands and historically important buildings. I have helped to deliver more affordable city housing and been involved in making Adelaide a cleaner city through renewable energy and public transport initiatives.

My Commitments

First and foremost, I will bring much-needed experience, competence and transparency to the City Council. I will ensure that we work together to build on what's best about Adelaide, serving and collaborating with our communities and businesses while tirelessly fighting to preserve our heritage, our Park Lands, our vibrant cultural life, and our legitimate rights as residents. I have done it before and I will do it again.
